- Students should be aware that papers should always be read thoroughly by other people and contain plenty of interesting typos. This will make for an interesting presentation of the paper, and the more that this can be done, the better your paper will be.
- Papers must use APA style, and be clear and readable. Papers should also be free of typographical errors and spelling mistakes. It is recommended that students have someone proofread their papers and have more than superficial detailing. Papers should be organised, flow well, and be interesting.
- Besides organising your content, having somebody else read your paper is important because they can make sure typos and misspelled words have occurred. They can also tell you if your paper is interesting or dull in presentation.
- The more interesting the paper, the better it is. Typos and misspelled words aren't as important as organisation or flow in your paper. Having someone read your paper can help you develop more interesting ideas. Papers should be presented in an interesting manner.
